The present invention relates to a device for the joint-cutting or severing of an elongate strip of material. In particular, the present invention is applicable to the cutting or severing of a composite of plastic material, in the form of a strip made up of two or more layers, in order to produce separate ribbons of material from the composite. The device according to the present invention is particularly applicable to a cutting or severing operation in which the composite material is a film material that is used in the manufacture of labels, stickers, and the like. For the purposes of clarification, in the following description, reference is made to the cutting or severing of a film material into separate ribbons of material. However, it will be understood that, although this is a preferred embodiment of the invention, the invention is not limited to this particular application and, accordingly, is applicable in situations where the material being severed comprises an elongate strip of material of any desired thickness. The prior art includes various machines for the cutting or severing of a film material or the like. A first type of machine is the so-called xe2x80x9cstitchlessxe2x80x9d machine which produces a ribbon from a continuous film of material without producing longitudinal or transverse threads of material, which threads could be drawn out and cut up to form separate labels or the like. An example of such a stitchless machine is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 4,915,179 and comprises a nip area defined by first and second rollers, between which the film of material is held, with the help of an elastic nip pressure ring; a stationary anvil roller is also located upstream of the nip area, and a cutter head is located downstream of the nip area, with the aid of which a ribbon of material
